

Cloze procedure is a questioning technique in which words are deleted from a passage. It allows us to determine students' comprehension of a reading passage. The examples that follow are simple examples that are also linked to listening comprehension in that the reading partner will likely read the sentence to the student and have the student select the symbol to show comprehension.

These examples correspond to the Can it! book and show examples using –

- Picture Communication Symbols (line drawings) from Mayer-Johnson's Boardmaker
- Tactile symbols
- Object symbols
- Photo symbols

Please note that the examples for the tactile, object, and photo symbols are much larger than that for the Picture Communication Symbols in that they were developed using chart paper.

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

First, Eric picks up the

Next, Eric trades the cans for

Last, Eric uses the money to buy

